Learn to Play a Larger Role in a Smaller World

In a rapidly shrinking world, St. George's University offers students the opportunity to study medicine around the world. Students gain a global perspective of medicine through an internationally renowned faculty both in Grenada and the UK as part of the Keith B. Taylor Global Scholars Program. The global experience continues with selectives in such locales as India, Kenya, Sweden, and the Czech Republic, and clinical opportunities in the US, UK, Canada and Grenada.

SGU graduates have practiced in over 50 countries around the world.

Put it all together, and by the time students earn their MDs, their resume features international experience that is highly sought-after by competitive resident and fellowship programs.

Become a leader in this new reality by studying global medicine at St. George's University, and gain the global skills necessary to succeed in a changing world today, and tomorrow.

Postgraduate Opportunities

As part of their post-graduate training, medical students do a residency: additional training in a clinical setting such as a hospital or clinic. The majority of SGU medical graduates are US citizens or permanent residents, and therefore seek residency training in the US. St. George's University is the #1 provider of doctors into first year US residencies for the last seven years, combined with over 860 residencies in the US in 2017.* *According to published information. April 2017.
